The Norwegian Light Show—What is Really Going On?

I. Media Reports and Theories

On December 9, 2009, one of the most spectacular light shows the world had ever seen appeared in the northern skies over Norway. This light show interestingly appeared at the same time U.S. President Barak Obama was visiting Norway's capital, Oslo to pick up his Nobel Peace Prize. The Barents Observer, a Norwegian Newspaper reported on December 9 that the light show was a "failed launch of a Bulava missile" from one of their submarines in the White Sea. Officially, the Norwegian Defense Ministry has agreed with this assessment, and pointed out that the Russian Defense Ministry warned them that they would be doing missile testing until December 15. The photo to the right taken by Dagfinn Rapp was published in support of this theory.

Since that time, many commentators have forwarded countless theories about what this light show could really be about. The bottom two pictures have come from other sites and have circulated the Internet for days following the event. For example the "Archangel Metatron" called this event a "Cosmic Burst of Love StarGate Portal Opening." He further declared that this is the most powerful burst of love to ever hit this planet. He further said that miracles would take place at this time. So far, we have come very short of this assessment.

Even Share International, the promoter of the divine being known as Maitreya has taken credit for this light show claiming that this "star" is really "one of four enormous spacecraft" strategically placed around the world to announce the coming of their so-called "world messiah.” This organization has been quick to take credit for this light show, without ever giving us any objective evidence of the existence of these “enormous spacecraft.” This almost sounds like a story out of the ABC Series V which appeared in four episodes this fall and then went on “hiatus.” We have been hearing these stories from Benjamin Crème for decades starting with the newspaper ads in the 1980s. So far, it has all been talk.

Other people have attributed this to some kind of dark energy working in this world. That some kind of evil Cabal is working to gain control of the earth using this technology. Others, in a similar vein, have suggested that this is a manifestation of the Blue Beam Project that the late Canadian journalist Serge Monast reported would happen late in this decade. Unfortunately, he was never able to publish the evidence he claimed to have about this project before he died. He told many people that this project was necessary to convince people of the true reality of the New World Order and that they should go along with it.

II. Objective Analysis

These light shows do not look anything like the work of a broken Russian skyrocket. When rockets explode, they do not produce the systematic patterns we have seen in these pictures. While some of these pictures may appear to be Adobe Photoshop modified, the basic patterns seem to be the same. It is hard for several photographers to fake the same shot. Instead, this looks to be something coming out of the east that we know little about.

Other people have suggested that the Large Hadron Collider (LHC) operating on the French-Swiss border might have produced this light show. While this could very well be possible, again, we have seen very little objective evidence that this machine could produce these lights 1,580 miles away. While some have speculated that the LHC may be able to open up portals and that this machine opened up a portal between these two areas, nobody has offered any proof.

What is far more likely is something the Russians suggested, that something coming out of a submarine in the White Sea east of Norway might be responsible. When you examine the area on Google Maps, the White Sea is directly east of Narvik, Norway, the largest city in northern Norway. The other fact overlooked in most analysis is the existence of a Polyarny Naval Base in the Russian Oblast (State/Province) of Murmansk. The existence of this base can be checked by watching the first minutes of the movie (and Tom Clancy novel) The Hunt for Red October. In this movie, we get a very good look at one of the most secretive bases in all of Russia. This base is well-known in military circles as a military shipyard and submarine base. However, there are many indications that the Russians do more than build ships and submarines at this base. With all the raw minerals in the area, it makes sense to build electrical components and do other research there. It is literally a long ways from anything else in Russia and also very hard to place spies in the area. The testing of submarines and missiles is not entirely out of the question.

III. Bible Code Analysis

We wondered if maybe the Russians were building their own Collider machine in the Murmansk Oblast and testing it in the White Sea. It was not long before we found that they were, but not using the technology used in Geneva. They are using a combination of silver, copper, clay and diamonds in their machine. In fact, we get the idea that they are using this machine to turn clay into diamonds. If this is true, they have the potential to destroy the financial markets in the world. We also see evidence they are indeed working with some kind of extra-terrestrials and sharing their technology with Iran.

This report contains the code we used and what we found in this code.
